

EPFL

SPACE4IMPACT

EZMC

eSpace
EPFL Space
Center

SPACE
INNOVATION

École
polytechnique
fédérale
de Lausanne

Week 1 History & trends in space

New Space Economy

Gaetan Petit, Space4Impact

operation called different telecommunication think things new space cost product access companies size many field instance payload Space Station planet radio company mean basically already provide using picture challenge course new specific solution lecture future know model something design talk bandwidth price building operator user right used people around potential global every point better part systems money latency Earth orbit sensor market information constellation support infrastructure video kind may within ground developed Corporate data network purpose high end fact state several back rocket sales event launcher activities technologies help type work programme important today even area approach investor SpaceX possible current source business model commercial object risk slide year together space economy working spacecraft Moon satellite data microgravity material impact open service time platform based development next kilometre increase signal show week good image world side spacecraft Moon satellite data microgravity material impact open deliver still customer launch main security Earth observation understand

Search MOOC

Video

EPFL

Welcome everyone to the first week of this new space economy course. This week, you will learn about how space exploration has been driving the space field for many years and how private funding is creating a new space economy. You will have some key insights on what are the drivers of the new space economy in 2021, and finally, you will learn how entrepreneurs will play a key role in the development of this new space economy.

Notes

Summary

