

If you have used one of the SV Research Core Facilities, you must explicitly recognize their services in any relevant publications. This recognition reflects that the SV Research Core Facilities are subsidized by the school, and helps us to secure funding for the establishment of new workflows and for procurement of future state-of-the-art equipment in the Research Core Facilities. Following accepted scientific practices, this recognition comes in two flavors: Acknowledgements and Authorships.

Acknowledgements:

As a general rule, the acknowledgement section of any manuscript presenting the data generated through services provided by the SV Research Core Facilities should contain the following information: name of the core facility, name(s) of facility personnel involved in the study and, when appropriate, the type of support provided.

We advise you to contact in good time the relevant Research Core Facility who will be able to help you with preparation/editing of the manuscript with respect to their particular contribution.

Authorships:

In those special cases where there is significant contribution to a project from Research Core Facility staff the question of authorship will arise. This should be discussed at the earliest possible stage. The fact of having paid the Research Core Facility for a certain service has no bearing on the question of authorship.
